

Climate Change Professional Short Courses Participant Evaluations

The ANU Climate Change Institute offers multiple professional short courses per year. A typical course covers a wide range of climate related topics over several sessions, with each topic presented by a leading ANU expert in the field. The content can be tailored to meet the needs of a specific audience, and can be scheduled over consecutive days or spread over weeks. Below is feedback we've received from participants after they've taken the course.

Our past courses have received an average of 4.4 stars out of 5!

Very comprehensive and diverse overview, engaging and knowledgeable lecturers, well-paced and a very important subject.

It was an excellent experience and I'm grateful to have heard from the wonderful speakers and engaged with the participants. It was particularly valuable looking at climate change through a multitude of lenses in quick succession, as it served as a reminder that in order to address it appropriately, we really need to take a transcontextual approach

Probably the best short course I have attended to date. Great work!

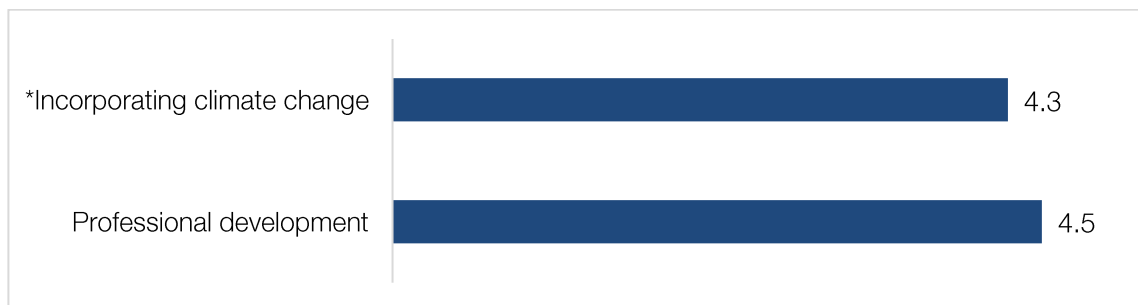

Relevance of the Course

The range of speakers and the different parts of the talks particularly adaptation and the built environment provided some good insight in how to build this into my work in policy and stakeholder engagement as part of my work

The course had a fantastic collection of sessions which complemented each other to create a really great foundation for work on climate science/ policy.

Engaged with presentations: I was well engaged with what was presented. | Aided learning: The activities & exercises aided my learning. | Participation: I was given adequate opportunity to participate in the learning.

Learning Environment and Organisation

Great to break it up over the 3 mornings - I definitely would have struggled with a full day online.

I congratulate the organisers for their hard work and efforts and thoughts in organising and delivering a successful day course.
